- FBIS' Joint Publications Research Service (JPRS) has started to receive translations on diskettes from translators participating in a pilot automation project. The translations on the diskettes are edited on and printed from a terminal, eliminating the need for retyping. JPRS automation will not only drastically reduce the time between translation and publication, but will also make JPRS translations available to the Intelligence Community in machine-readable form. The pilot project is scheduled to run through February 1985.
- FBIS has monitored a report that China will launch two television satellites in 1987 and 1988 to begin nationwide satellite TV broadcasting. The reporting indicates that programming on China's television will increase eightfold. Chinese television is currently monitored [redacted] from earth-based transmissions.

- [redacted] briefed a group of USIA officers on intelligence at USIA Headquarters. The group appeared to believe the Soviet disinformation of the KAL shoot-down. While [redacted] apparently succeeded in persuading them of the true facts of the case, D/PAO finds it incredible that this group, as well as a previously briefed NSA group, should have succumbed to the Soviet disinformation campaign. D/PAO has told Bob Sims in the White House that the Public Affairs people there should take the initiative and do something to counter the Soviet propaganda. ABC's 20/20 and other TV programs are scheduled to run West German and British programs which carry the Soviet disinformation line.
